To Whom It May Concern:

After using the FASEP alignment system for some time now we find the system a great addition to our business. In today's business climate, where cycle time is king, we found that eliminating a sublet process and doing the alignment in our facility is not only quicker but more accurate. In a matter of minutes the technician can set up the system and see the specs on the computer screen with ease, consolidating the labor all in one process. There is no more hoping that it is close enough for the alignment shop to make it fly. Gone are the days of tying up several employees to pick up and drop off the vehicle. I won't even mention that you are under the whim of the alignment shop's schedule, where the car can sit for who knows how long.

As far as the accuracy of the system is concerned, the results speak for themselves. Our facility does a large volume of high-end vehicles such as Jaguar, Saab, Volvo, and Porsche. With these types of vehicles and this caliber of customer, good enough is not good enough. Only the best will do.

My biggest worry was how the technicians would accept something new. As most business owners have experienced, when you introduce new equipment, it usually isn't accepted with open minds. Much to my surprise, the technicians found the system easy to understand and easy to use. The on-screen tutorial was easy to access and answered most of our questions. As a back up, the local FASEP representative took the time on his own to make a paper bound manual.

I highly recommend this alignment equipment, and will even be glad to take any questions from potential customers as a thank you for making this purchase a great experience.

Sincerely,
